Why is Teamship teacher training called Coaching Institute?

Teamship asks educators to teach in a way that is both new and essential to the program model.

Teaching durable skills is new terrain for most teachers

Collaboration, problem-solving, and communication are difficult skills to teach. Teamship makes them the focus, not a byproduct.

Teachers learn to guide rather than direct student learning

Coaches guide students to own the problem-solving process - letting them work through ambiguity instead of handing over answers. It's a shift from leading at the front of the room to knowing when to challenge and when to support.

Why this matters

Required coach training protects the model. It's how we ensure every Teamship experience - in every classroom, every district - holds up to the same standard of quality.

After the completion of a Coach's first Teamship cycle, their dedicated Team Member will meet with them to discuss their experience, provide feedback, and preview future cycle implementations.

Coaches also receive access to the Teamship Playbook and live quarterly Coach Huddles.

Teachers receive IACET-accredited Certificate of 2.8 CEUs for completing the Coaching Institute.
